- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport security
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

The attached talking points (1) relate to the aviation security
legislation the
President supports, and (2) make the case why it is important that the government have maximum hiring flexibility to ensure that we have the toughest
possible passenger and baggage screening services available at airport
check points.

IMPROVING AVIATION SAFETY & SECURITY

The President urges swift bipartisan action on his comprehensive package to put in place tough new security measures to make our airports and our airplanes safer:

- ☑ Federalize airport security
- ☑ Significantly expand the Federal Air Marshal program
- ☑ Fortify cockpit doors to protect pilots and crews
- ☑ Put the toughest possible passenger and baggage screening on the front lines

H.R. 3150 – THE SECURE TRANSPORTATION FOR AMERICA ACT

- Expands the Federal Air Marshal program.
- Authorizes $500 million for cockpit/aircraft security.
- Creates a new Transportation Security Agency (TSA) housed at the Department of Transportation within three months and directs the new Agency to take over airline security screening.
- Gives the TSA the ability to contract with high quality private security companies to perform the screening function where it is safer and more effective.
- Ensures that the federal employees of the TSA supervise, manage, set standards, train and perform background checks for everyone involved in passenger and baggage screening.
- Requires a Federal law enforcement officer to be stationed at every screening location.
- Directs the TSA to improve the security of all airport areas with access to airplanes.

PUTTING THE TOUGHEST POSSIBLE BAGGAGE SCREENING ON THE FRONT LINES

- In the wake of September 11 we need to drastically improve the way passenger baggage is screened at airports. We need the toughest possible baggage screening at airport security check points.

- The federal control model proposed by the President mirrors the well regarded airline security systems in Europe, which are public/private partnerships with strong government oversight. In fact, in many of these systems, the national government chose to replace public security personnel with private contractors to improve security at their airports.

- H.R. 3150 puts control of aviation security with the agency that has the experience to get the job done – the Department of Transportation. DOT has a broad statutory mandate and nearly 35 years of operational experience. DOT also already has much of the necessary infrastructure in place to facilitate a smooth transition by providing transportation security inspections, enforcement and oversight while the new TSA gets up and running.

- H.R. 3150 gives the federal government a choice. It can choose to only hire federal workers or it can choose – on an airport-by-airport basis – to work with private contractors who demonstrate they can meet the tougher, and safer screening services mandated by the federal government. Under H.R. 3150:

  - ✓ The federal government will be responsible for baggage screening.
  - ✓ The federal government will oversee training of baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will conduct the background checks on baggage screeners.
  - ✓ The federal government will set rigorous standards and qualifications for baggage screeners.

- The President's plan to put the toughest possible baggage screeners at security check points is more effective than other plans because it is:

  - ✓ Quicker and more efficient. We need tough new baggage screeners on the job as quickly as possible. Allowing only federal workers to screen bags will require more than 20,000 new federal employees. Common sense dictates that creating a new workforce of more than 20,000 new federal workers will be a costly and lengthy process – precious time will be wasted that could be better spent screening bags. The 20,000 workers will also need to be assembled and trained from scratch, delaying the new security system for an undetermined period of time. It simply makes sense to allow some use of private companies that already have trained workers in place and to let the federal government concentrate on getting new security measures in place as quickly as possible.

  - ✓ Puts more resources at the screening gate – not in Washington bureaucracy. Not giving airports a choice in hiring will keep more money in Washington for administrative costs and other expenses – every dollar that stays in Washington for administrative costs is a dollar that is not protecting Americans at the baggage screening gate. Mandatory full federalization would immediately put more than 20,000 new employees on the federal payroll and require administration of the entire array of support services needed for such a large complement of federal workers. Using private workers with established administrative infrastructures will put more dollars at the gate.

  - ✓ Produces tougher, more qualified baggage screeners. If the government doesn't have a choice in hiring screeners, there will be no competition and less incentive to produce tougher, more qualified screeners. Expanding options for airports will put the toughest screeners possible at the screening check points.

  - ✓ Ensures flexibility to discipline or remove unqualified screeners. Permitting the use of contract employees will preserve the most flexibility and control for the federal security agency. The government needs the authority to replace unqualified individual screeners – or even an entire airport screening workforce that is not meeting the rigorous new security standards.

Subject: Senator Hatch's Comments on the Senate Floor Yesterday

The Department of Justice has been of great assistance to us in putting this bill together. In particular,
I would like to thank Attorney General John Ashcroft and his Deputy Larry Thompson for their wise counsel, their leadership, and their quick response to our many questions and concerns. Michael Chertoff, the Assistant Attorney General for the Criminal Division was a frequent participant in our meetings, as was Assistant Attorneys General Dan Bryant and Viet Dinh.

Justice
Department lawyers
Jennifer Newstead, John Yoo, John Elwood, Pat O'Brien, and Carl Thorsen were
valuable participants in this process.

The White House Counsel and Congressional Liaison staff provided
contributions at all stages of this process. Judge Al Gonzales, the White House
Counsel, provided key guidance with the help of his gifted staff, including Deputy White House Counsel Tim Flanagan and Associate Counsels Courtney Elwood,
Brett Kavanaugh, and Brad Berenson.

The White House Congressional Liaison office, together with the Vice President's office, worked nonstop to keep this process moving forward and were critically responsive to any requests the Senate had. Nick Calio, Ziad Ojakli, and Heather Wingate with the White House, and Nancy Dorn and Candy Wolff with the Vice President's office, deserve our gratitude for all the assistance

INCREASING IMMIGRATION SAFEGUARDS AND IMPROVING VITAL INFORMATION SHARING

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush convened the first formal meeting of the full Homeland Security Council (HSC).

- The President took another step in the fight against terrorism by issuing a Presidential Directive to improve immigration policies and practices and make it more difficult for terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION TO TIGHTEN IMMIGRATION POLICIES

- America is a nation of immigrants, and improving legal immigration remains a priority for the Bush Administration. But the Bush Administration is committed to ensuring that our immigration policies and practices do not allow terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

- To increase immigration safeguards and improve vital information sharing between federal agencies, President Bush issued a new Homeland Security Presidential Directive to help combat terrorism through more effective immigration policies and practices.

- Among its key features, the Presidential Directive:

  - Creates a Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force: The Task Force will coordinate Federal programs designed to: (1) deny entry into the U.S. of aliens associated with, suspected of being engaged in or supporting terrorist activity; and (2) locate, detain, prosecute, or deport any such aliens already present in the U.S. The Task Force will be established by the Attorney General by November 1. Experts from the State Department, FBI, INS, Secret Service, Customs Service and the intelligence community will serve on the Task Force.
  - Orders a Thorough Review of Student Visa Policies: International students add greatly to the vitality and quality of our nation's colleges, universities and other institutions of learning. The Presidential Directive orders the Secretary of State and the Attorney General – working with the Secretary of Education, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) -- to institute tighter controls and ensure that student visas are being issued appropriately. A goal of the program is to prohibit the education and training of foreign nationals who would use their training to harm the United States and its Allies.
  - Better Coordinates Immigration and Customs Policies with Canada and Mexico: Millions of people and billions of dollars of goods move legally between the United States, Canada and Mexico each year. The United States seeks to deny potential terrorists easy entry into the country from Canada or Mexico, while ensuring that legal travel and commerce continues with minimal border restrictions. The Directive orders the Secretaries of State and Treasury and the Attorney General to increase the sharing of customs and immigration information with Canada and Mexico, and work with our neighbors to develop a shared immigration and customs control database. These efforts will ensure the maximum possible compatibility of immigration, customs and visa policies.

- The Presidential Directive also:

  - Directs the Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury to enhance the investigative and intelligence analysis capabilities of the INS and the Customs Service, and to increase INS and Customs special agent personnel assigned to Joint Terrorism Task Forces
  - Directs the Office of Science and Technology Policy to work with the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence to make recommendations on advanced technology that could be used to aid immigration enforcement
  - Directs the Office of Management and Budget to work with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to develop a budgetary plan to support this effort

- President Bush believes that better information sharing, improved technology and increased coordination can vastly improve the ability of our immigration system to prevent terrorists from entering or operating in the United States.

This is a new web page that the Hispanic Biz Roundtable and the Latino Coalition put together. They are asking for our help in getting signatures for the TPA petition. I would like to send out to our Team Leaders. I talked to Jack about it. We just want to make sure you guys are OK with it.
Let me know.

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush convened the first formal meeting of the full Homeland Security Council (HSC).

- The President took another step in the fight against terrorism by issuing a Presidential Directive to improve immigration policies and practices and make it more difficult for terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION TO TIGHTEN IMMIGRATION POLICIES

- America is a nation of immigrants, and improving legal immigration remains a priority for the Bush Administration. But the Bush Administration is committed to ensuring that our immigration policies and practices do not allow terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

- To increase immigration safeguards and improve vital information sharing between federal agencies, President Bush issued a new Homeland Security Presidential Directive to help combat terrorism through more effective immigration policies and practices.

- Among its key features, the Presidential Directive:

  - Creates a Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force: The Task Force will coordinate Federal programs designed to: (1) deny entry into the U.S. of aliens associated with, suspected of being engaged in or supporting terrorist activity; and (2) locate, detain, prosecute, or deport any such aliens already present in the U.S. The Task Force will be established by the Attorney General by November 1. Experts from the State Department, FBI, INS, Secret Service, Customs Service and the intelligence community will serve on the Task Force.
  - Orders a Thorough Review of Student Visa Policies: International students add greatly to the vitality and quality of our nation's colleges, universities and other institutions of learning. The Presidential Directive orders the Secretary of State and the Attorney General – working with the Secretary of Education, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) -- to institute tighter controls and ensure that student visas are being issued appropriately. A goal of the program is to prohibit the education and training of foreign nationals who would use their training to harm the United States and its Allies.
  - Better Coordinates Immigration and Customs Policies with Canada and Mexico: Millions of people and billions of dollars of goods move legally between the United States, Canada and Mexico each year. The United States seeks to deny potential terrorists easy entry into the country from Canada or Mexico, while ensuring that legal travel and commerce continues with minimal border restrictions. The Directive orders the Secretaries of State and Treasury and the Attorney General to increase the sharing of customs and immigration information with Canada and Mexico, and work with our neighbors to develop a shared immigration and customs control database. These efforts will ensure the maximum possible compatibility of immigration, customs and visa policies.

- The Presidential Directive also:

  - Directs the Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury to enhance the investigative and intelligence analysis capabilities of the INS and the Customs Service, and to increase INS and Customs special agent personnel assigned to Joint Terrorism Task Forces
  - Directs the Office of Science and Technology Policy to work with the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence to make recommendations on advanced technology that could be used to aid immigration enforcement
  - Directs the Office of Management and Budget to work with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to develop a budgetary plan to support this effort

- President Bush believes that better information sharing, improved technology and increased coordination can vastly improve the ability of our immigration system to prevent terrorists from entering or operating in the United States.

INCREASING IMMIGRATION SAFEGUARDS AND IMPROVING VITAL INFORMATION SHARING

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush convened the first formal meeting of the full Homeland Security Council (HSC).

- The President took another step in the fight against terrorism by issuing a Presidential Directive to improve immigration policies and practices and make it more difficult for terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION TO TIGHTEN IMMIGRATION POLICIES

- America is a nation of immigrants, and improving legal immigration remains a priority for the Bush Administration. But the Bush Administration is committed to ensuring that our immigration policies and practices do not allow terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

- To increase immigration safeguards and improve vital information sharing between federal agencies, President Bush issued a new Homeland Security Presidential Directive to help combat terrorism through more effective immigration policies and practices.

- Among its key features, the Presidential Directive:

  - Creates a Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force: The Task Force will coordinate Federal programs designed to: (1) deny entry into the U.S. of aliens associated with, suspected of being engaged in or supporting terrorist activity; and (2) locate, detain, prosecute, or deport any such aliens already present in the U.S. The Task Force will be established by the Attorney General by November 1. Experts from the State Department, FBI, INS, Secret Service, Customs Service and the intelligence community will serve on the Task Force.
  - Orders a Thorough Review of Student Visa Policies: International students add greatly to the vitality and quality of our nation's colleges, universities and other institutions of learning. The Presidential Directive orders the Secretary of State and the Attorney General – working with the Secretary of Education, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) -- to institute tighter controls and ensure that student visas are being issued appropriately. A goal of the program is to prohibit the education and training of foreign nationals who would use their training to harm the United States and its Allies.
  - Better Coordinates Immigration and Customs Policies with Canada and Mexico: Millions of people and billions of dollars of goods move legally between the United States, Canada and Mexico each year. The United States seeks to deny potential terrorists easy entry into the country from Canada or Mexico, while ensuring that legal travel and commerce continues with minimal border restrictions. The Directive orders the Secretaries of State and Treasury and the Attorney General to increase the sharing of customs and immigration information with Canada and Mexico, and work with our neighbors to develop a shared immigration and customs control database. These efforts will ensure the maximum possible compatibility of immigration, customs and visa policies.

- The Presidential Directive also:

  - Directs the Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury to enhance the investigative and intelligence analysis capabilities of the INS and the Customs Service, and to increase INS and Customs special agent personnel assigned to Joint Terrorism Task Forces
  - Directs the Office of Science and Technology Policy to work with the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence to make recommendations on advanced technology that could be used to aid immigration enforcement
  - Directs the Office of Management and Budget to work with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to develop a budgetary plan to support this effort

- President Bush believes that better information sharing, improved technology and increased coordination can vastly improve the ability of our immigration system to prevent terrorists from entering or operating in the United States.

INCREASING IMMIGRATION SAFEGUARDS AND IMPROVING VITAL INFORMATION SHARING

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush convened the first formal meeting of the full Homeland Security Council (HSC).

- The President took another step in the fight against terrorism by issuing a Presidential Directive to improve immigration policies and practices and make it more difficult for terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION TO TIGHTEN IMMIGRATION POLICIES

- America is a nation of immigrants, and improving legal immigration remains a priority for the Bush Administration. But the Bush Administration is committed to ensuring that our immigration policies and practices do not allow terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

- To increase immigration safeguards and improve vital information sharing between federal agencies, President Bush issued a new Homeland Security Presidential Directive to help combat terrorism through more effective immigration policies and practices.

- Among its key features, the Presidential Directive:

  - Creates a Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force: The Task Force will coordinate Federal programs designed to: (1) deny entry into the U.S. of aliens associated with, suspected of being engaged in or supporting terrorist activity; and (2) locate, detain, prosecute, or deport any such aliens already present in the U.S. The Task Force will be established by the Attorney General by November 1. Experts from the State Department, FBI, INS, Secret Service, Customs Service and the intelligence community will serve on the Task Force.
  - Orders a Thorough Review of Student Visa Policies: International students add greatly to the vitality and quality of our nation's colleges, universities and other institutions of learning. The Presidential Directive orders the Secretary of State and the Attorney General – working with the Secretary of Education, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) -- to institute tighter controls and ensure that student visas are being issued appropriately. A goal of the program is to prohibit the education and training of foreign nationals who would use their training to harm the United States and its Allies.
  - Better Coordinates Immigration and Customs Policies with Canada and Mexico: Millions of people and billions of dollars of goods move legally between the United States, Canada and Mexico each year. The United States seeks to deny potential terrorists easy entry into the country from Canada or Mexico, while ensuring that legal travel and commerce continues with minimal border restrictions. The Directive orders the Secretaries of State and Treasury and the Attorney General to increase the sharing of customs and immigration information with Canada and Mexico, and work with our neighbors to develop a shared immigration and customs control database. These efforts will ensure the maximum possible compatibility of immigration, customs and visa policies.

- The Presidential Directive also:

  - Directs the Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury to enhance the investigative and intelligence analysis capabilities of the INS and the Customs Service, and to increase INS and Customs special agent personnel assigned to Joint Terrorism Task Forces
  - Directs the Office of Science and Technology Policy to work with the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence to make recommendations on advanced technology that could be used to aid immigration enforcement
  - Directs the Office of Management and Budget to work with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to develop a budgetary plan to support this effort

- President Bush believes that better information sharing, improved technology and increased coordination can vastly improve the ability of our immigration system to prevent terrorists from entering or operating in the United States.

INCREASING IMMIGRATION SAFEGUARDS AND IMPROVING VITAL INFORMATION SHARING

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush convened the first formal meeting of the full Homeland Security Council (HSC).

- The President took another step in the fight against terrorism by issuing a Presidential Directive to improve immigration policies and practices and make it more difficult for terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

ABOUT THE PRESIDENT'S ACTION TO TIGHTEN IMMIGRATION POLICIES

- America is a nation of immigrants, and improving legal immigration remains a priority for the Bush Administration. But the Bush Administration is committed to ensuring that our immigration policies and practices do not allow terrorists to enter or remain in the United States.

- To increase immigration safeguards and improve vital information sharing between federal agencies, President Bush issued a new Homeland Security Presidential Directive to help combat terrorism through more effective immigration policies and practices.

- Among its key features, the Presidential Directive:

  - Creates a Foreign Terrorist Tracking Task Force: The Task Force will coordinate Federal programs designed to: (1) deny entry into the U.S. of aliens associated with, suspected of being engaged in or supporting terrorist activity; and (2) locate, detain, prosecute, or deport any such aliens already present in the U.S. The Task Force will be established by the Attorney General by November 1. Experts from the State Department, FBI, INS, Secret Service, Customs Service and the intelligence community will serve on the Task Force.
  - Orders a Thorough Review of Student Visa Policies: International students add greatly to the vitality and quality of our nation's colleges, universities and other institutions of learning. The Presidential Directive orders the Secretary of State and the Attorney General – working with the Secretary of Education, Secretary of Defense, Secretary of Energy and the Director of the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP) -- to institute tighter controls and ensure that student visas are being issued appropriately. A goal of the program is to prohibit the education and training of foreign nationals who would use their training to harm the United States and its Allies.
  - Better Coordinates Immigration and Customs Policies with Canada and Mexico: Millions of people and billions of dollars of goods move legally between the United States, Canada and Mexico each year. The United States seeks to deny potential terrorists easy entry into the country from Canada or Mexico, while ensuring that legal travel and commerce continues with minimal border restrictions. The Directive orders the Secretaries of State and Treasury and the Attorney General to increase the sharing of customs and immigration information with Canada and Mexico, and work with our neighbors to develop a shared immigration and customs control database. These efforts will ensure the maximum possible compatibility of immigration, customs and visa policies.

- The Presidential Directive also:

  - Directs the Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury to enhance the investigative and intelligence analysis capabilities of the INS and the Customs Service, and to increase INS and Customs special agent personnel assigned to Joint Terrorism Task Forces
  - Directs the Office of Science and Technology Policy to work with the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence to make recommendations on advanced technology that could be used to aid immigration enforcement
  - Directs the Office of Management and Budget to work with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant to the President for Homeland Security to develop a budgetary plan to support this effort

- President Bush believes that better information sharing, improved technology and increased coordination can vastly improve the ability of our immigration system to prevent terrorists from entering or operating in the United States.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

"Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused.

"They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

"It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

"Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

"He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity.

"Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver."

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

"Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused.

"They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

"It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

"Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

"He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity.

"Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver."

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

"Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused.

"They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

"It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

"Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

"He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity.

"Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver."

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

"Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused.

"They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

"It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

"Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

"He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity.

"Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver."

SPEECH TO THE WELSH ASSEMBLY

Thank you for your invitation to be here today – the first British Prime Minister to have addressed the National Assembly of Wales.

Devolution is about harnessing the power of community – the diverse community that is the United Kingdom, and the national communities that through devolution can take their futures in their own hands.

Wales has a long history of innovation. It has been a great industrial exporter – from the coal and steel that powered the first industrial revolution to satellite components and computer circuit boards today, when more people work in its electronics plants than coal mines.

You have always been exporters of ideas and of reforming politicians too. The pioneering socialist Robert Owen. David Lloyd George. Nye Bevan, the father of the NHS. And of course my predecessors as leader of the Labour Party - Neil Kinnock, Michael Foot, and Jim Callaghan, in whose former constituency the Assembly is located.

The National Assembly leads a newly confident Wales, giving a lead to the rest of the UK - and to Europe.

But now we have to make devolution really deliver for the people of Wales - delivering not just greater democracy but also better public services and stronger communities.

When I accepted this invitation months ago, I had in mind a very different speech than the one I give today. I understand some feel I should not address the present crisis in the Welsh Assembly. I am sorry if that is the case but if I were speaking today before any Parliament in the world, I should feel obliged to talk about the issue that rightly preoccupies people and I hope the people of Wales will consider it a mark of respect not of disrespect if I do so here. And we should never forget the contribution Wales and the Welsh people make to our Armed Forces.

I said a few days ago that now would be the testing time. People want results. They want them as fast as possible.

They realise the formidable challenges posed by any action in Afghanistan. They worry about civilian casualties. They are anxious about the refugee crisis as winter approaches. They wonder what comes after the conflict.

All these concerns deserve to be answered. No one who raises doubts is an appeaser or a faint heart. We are a democracy, strong enough to have doubts raised even at a time of war and wise enough to be able to respond to them.

But let us go back to why we are in this conflict. On 11 September, thousands of people were killed in cold blood in the worst terrorist attacks the world has ever seen. That is a fact. Those responsible were the Al Qaida network reared by Usama Bin Laden. That is a fact barely disputed by anymore. Incidentally, the intelligence evidence, significant when I first drew attention to it on 3 October, is now a flood, confirming guilt.

The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. Indeed, according to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September. That, too is a fact.

Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused. These are also facts.

They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

So: we have a group of people in Afghanistan who are the sworn enemies of everything the civilised world stands for, who have killed once on a vast scale and will kill again unless stopped. They can't be negotiated with. They refuse to yield to justice.

And they have one hope: that we are decadent, that we lack the moral fibre or will or courage to take them on; that we might begin but we won't finish; that we will start, then falter; that when the first setbacks occur, we will lose our nerve.

They are wrong. We won't falter.

We will not stop until our mission is complete. We will not flinch from doing what is necessary to complete it. We will not fail and we will do it all because we believe in our values of justice, tolerance and respect for all regardless of race, religion or creed just as passionately as they believe in fanatical hatred of Jews, Christians and any Moslems who don't share their perverse view of Islam.

They mistake our desire for a comfortable life, living in peace, benign towards different races and cultures, for decadence. It is not decadence. It is progress and we will fight to maintain it.

Now let me return to the questions that need answering.

Our objectives are clear: to close down the Al Qaida network, bring UBL and his associates to justice and because the Taliban regime have chosen to side with Al Qaida, to remove them.

The means we use will be: air power; ground operations as and when necessary in furtherance of our aims; support to the Northern Alliance and other anti-Taliban regime elements; and building up a strong political and diplomatic coalition against the present Taliban regime inside and outside Afghanistan.

We have destroyed the Taliban air force, put Taliban airfields and air defence systems out of action; destroyed all the main Al Qaida camps; profoundly damaged Taliban command and control facilities, and dramatically reduced their capacity to communicate with their forces in the field.

So this is a steady process of fragmenting, undermining and eventually destroying the Taliban regime as a serious threat capable of inflicting any more damage on their country and the outside world.

But two words of caution. This is not a conventional conflict. It is not a battle for territory per se or for the subjugation of Afghanistan. It is a battle to allow Afghans themselves to re-take control of their country and in doing so to close down the threat posed by the present rules. The political and diplomatic go hand in hand with the military. And we simply cannot and should not disclose the exact nature of the ground operations we intend to undertake. There is a limit to what we can sensibly discuss in public.

We do all we can to limit civilian casualties, unlike Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida who did all they could to cause as many civilian casualties as possible.

Tragically, there will be some but I do ask people to be deeply sceptical about Taliban claims.

Whilst the military action continues, two other things are happening. We are establishing a huge humanitarian effort - $700m already pledged. We are determined to feed and shelter as many refugees as we can. But we have to contend with armed groups harassing UN food convoys, stealing their equipment or even the food itself. We are in continuous discussion with the UN agencies and other on the ground to see how to improve the delivery of supplies and humanitarian assistance, and carry on doing all we can.

Secondly, under the leadership of Mr Brahimi, the Special UN Envoy, the UN is convening as wide a representative group of Afghan opinion as possible in order that when the present Taliban regime falls, a successor regime, broad-based, can take its place. All the main regional countries are being consulted.

The end we desire is this: Al Qaida shut down in Afghanistan ; the Taliban regime out; a new broad-based regime in; Afghan reconstruction underway.

Our military action is focussed on Afghanistan. But terrorism is a wider problem not limited to there. We will take action as a world community on its financing, weapons capability and movement of terrorists wherever we can, as with the recent EU measures. This second stage of action will, of course, be subject to close consultation and deliberation with the global alliance against terrorism.

The international coalition remains strong. I pay tribute to Arab and Moslem countries who have supported our action. I thank Saudi Arabia for its forthright condemnation and action. UBL may be Saudi in origin but he defames the good name of Saudi Arabia, which is a good and dependable friend to the civilised world.

Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver.

It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity. Now he would like to hijack a religion; and hijack the Palestinian cause too.

We are a principled nation, and this is a principled conflict.

September 11th is no less appalling today than it was on September 11th. Our determination is no less resolute than it was on the day military action began. We have a job to do; and it is being done and will be seen through to the end.

Now is a time for people of all races and all faiths in Britain to stand together.

That is exactly what Moslem leaders in Wales and across Britain have done with their forthright condemnation of the atrocities of 11 September, and I thank them for it.

I condemn utterly the attacks and abuse that some British Moslems have suffered since 11 September – some of them here in Wales.

And I say to the 50,000 Moslems living in Wales today: we will defend your right to live free from the fear of racism and religious hatred.

Partly as a result of 11 September we face now a more difficult economic time. But in any event, as a result of globalisation, we face constant challenges.

The Corus job losses were a heavy blow.

Sectors such as tourism - already struggling from foot and mouth - have been hit hard.

But the fundamentals of our economy both in Wales and in Britain are the strongest they have been in a generation.

Employment is rising, not falling. Unemployment here in Wales is at its lowest level for over 25 years. Interest rates are at their lowest for nearly 40 years.

We have seen 200 new high tech jobs at a £90 million BT Ignite development here in Cardiff; and almost 200 at Continental Teves and Desk Link in Blaenau Gwent – an area particularly hard hit by the Corus losses. New investment that this Assembly helped to secure.

I have also heard from business leaders that the Assembly has given Wales a real business voice. Of course, that was one reason behind creating an Assembly. Much of the pressure for regional government in England comes from their desire to emulate you.

Those who said that devolution would lead to the break up of Britain have been proved wrong.

Earlier we met together - leaders from the UK, from Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland to discuss issues of common interest. Diversity does not mean division – quite the reverse. People are perfectly capable of thinking of themselves as Welsh and British at the same time.

Devolution to Wales is just one part of a much wider programme of constitutional reform designed to move us away from a centralised Britain to a more democratic, decentralised, plural state.

The Scottish Parliament has meant a radical decline in the numbers of Scots wanting separation. In London, there is now an elected Assembly and Mayor. In Northern Ireland, thanks to the efforts of the leaders there, we have in a part of the UK riven by sectarian division, the chance of a new future.

In each area and here in Wales, there are difficulties and tensions between parties and within parties.

But the result is that instead of one centre of power focussed on Whitehall and Westminster, there are several with the opportunity for power to be exercised closer to the people it affects. And I believe the most remarkable thing is not the problem of devolution but the ease with which what amounts to a constitutional revolution, has bedded down.

But devolution fits within a broader framework, re-balancing power between citizen and Government and modernising Britain's constitution.

We have incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights into UK law. We have reformed the voting system both here and in the European Parliament.

And we have started reform of the House of Lords, removing the vast bulk of hereditary peers.

The Wakeham Commission reported in favour of the next stage of reform, with a balance of elected, nominated and independent members.

Later this month we will publish a White Paper setting out our proposals for it, based largely on the Wakeham report.

There will be an elected element, to ensure proper regional representation. There will be a statutory Appointments Commission. There will continue to be independent members. There will be rules to determine fair political balance.

We will consult on these proposals and then legislate so that we complete the work of Lords reform begun in 1997.

But constitutional reform and devolution can never be ends in themselves. They are means to an end: to improve the lives of the people we serve.

Two years on we must ask ourselves how devolved institutions have measured up to that task.

I believe there are real achievements of which the Assembly and Wales can be proud.

On education, Wales has seen the best primary school results ever. Class sizes are smaller too.

And on health, record investment is being matched with reform.

Meanwhile the National Assembly has confidently handled its baptism of fire– the fuel crisis, last year's flooding, Corus, and foot and mouth. That is a credit to the Assembly - and to your leadership and commitment as First Minister, Rhodri.

Nearly half of the Assembly and a majority of the Cabinet are women - a level that puts virtually every other parliament in the world to shame.

Pensioners and people with disabilities now enjoy concessionary bus travel – a policy made in Wales, now being extended to England.

But a huge task still remains.

There are major challenges above all in improving the delivery of public services – challenges that are just as great here in Wales as in the rest of Britain.

In our schools, where we need to raise standards still higher.

In our hospitals, where people are still waiting too long for treatment.

The priority now must be to harness the full potential of the current devolution settlement to improve the lives of the people of Wales.

Westminster must play its part in that process too. Devolution is about partnership - and partnership is a two-way street.

That is a principle on which both Rhodri and Paul have led the way – that we achieve more by working I partnership.

The last Spending Review alone provides an extra £1.8 billion of investment in Welsh public services.

Partnership means ensuring that Wales' voice is heard loud and clear in Westminster - and Wales could have no greater champion than Paul Murphy.

Partnership allows us then to act together on issues where Wales and Westminster need to.

- legislation for a new Children's Commissioner – the first post of its kind in Britain;

- the reforms to the Health Service in Wales that were voted on here in this very chamber.

- on Objective One, for example, where the funding is now in place to help deprived communities in West Wales and the Valleys.

- or on miners' compensation, where I know that the money has not been getting to those who are suffering quickly enough; but where we are doing all we can to speed up the payments and ensure that the money gets to those who need it most – the oldest and the sickest miners and widows. Every week now we pay out £1 million in Wales - over £100 million in total so far.

I believe devolution has left the UK stronger not weaker. We are able to do as the UK what we need to do together. And in respect of issues like public services, we can do things differently. Such a constitutional partnership is commonplace elsewhere in Europe and round the world. It allows the energy and diversity of different parts of our country to breathe and develop.

Devolution is in its infancy still. But already there is a healthy debate abut how it can develop, which is taking root also in the English regions.

There is a wider context. A development is taking place that is again obvious and replicated world-wide. Nations are coming closer together – the EU, NAFTA, ASEAN, Mercosur.

Increasingly challenges, interests and solutions are global like climate change, international finance or terrorism.

Yet coincidentally, at the very time nations collaborate on a bigger stage, so within countries, there is a greater desire to seize back control over local issues on a smaller stage. Politics is finding different levels appropriate to different types of issue.

Political systems that fail to make sense of these developments will either become out of touch with people or ineffectual.

Modern Britain is trying to avoid these pitfalls – a true partner now in the EU and globally, committed to devolution on the issues where devolution makes sense; yet proud to be Britain where we need to act as Britain.

Separation of the component parts of the UK is a cul-de-sac. It would just make each part weaker. There is merit in the simple argument that when it comes to the economy, defence, foreign policy, social security, bigger is stronger. We can then project that strength globally.

But within that unity, diversity can flourish. That is why devolution is important. In its infancy it may be, but it is here to stay. I was proud to make the case for the Welsh Assembly, proud that case was accepted and proud to be the first British Prime Minister to address you. I won't be the last.

EXCERPTS FROM PRIME MINISTER BLAIR'S SPEECH ON THE WAR AGAINST TERRORISM

Prime Minister Blair in a major speech today Wales set out the moral case for pursuing the war on terrorism, and recommitted the UK and the whole coalition to seeing this action through to the end. He said:

"The Taliban regime in Afghanistan protect Al Qaida and help them. That is a fact. According to the latest evidence we have, they are virtually a merged organisation. The Taliban regime are cruel, dictatorial and oppressive, causing 4½ million refugees to be on the move before 11 September.

"Usama Bin Laden and Al Qaida have said they consider it their duty to commit further terrorist acts. We gave the Taliban an ultimatum to deliver up Usama Bin Laden. They refused.

"They lead to one inescapable conclusion: that if we do not act against Al Qaida and the Taliban, Al Qaida will have perpetrated this atrocity, the Taliban will have sheltered them, and we will have done nothing. We will have done nothing despite the fact, also inescapable, that they intend to commit more atrocities unless we yield to their demands which include the eradication of Israel, the killing of all Jews and the setting up of fundamentalist states in all parts of the Arab and Moslem world.

"It is important we never forget why we are doing it. Important we never forget how we felt watching the planes fly into the twin towers. Never forget those answering machine messages. Never forget how we felt imagining how mothers told children they were about to die.

"Never forget the guts of the fire fighters and police who died trying to save others. Never forget the menace of UBL in his propaganda video. Never forget that too long a list of countries who lost sons and daughters. Never forget that they were of all faiths and none; Christian, Jew and Moslem; many Moslems, for it is not us who are at war with Islam. It is Al Qaida and the Taliban who are at war with anyone, whatever their faith, who does not share their maniacal, fanatical view of the world.

"He did not just hijack planes. He has hijacked a country from which he runs his terrorist, criminal activity.

"Every part of this is difficult. Every part requires courage, conviction, hard work. In every part, there may be setbacks from time to time.
But in every part, we have justice and right on our side, and a strategy to deliver."

Attached is a summary of nominations and confirmations as of 10/29.

more judges, ambassadors and subcabinet/regulatory than Clinton
-70 fewer confirmations than Reagan at same point in time.

NO REASON WHY THESE 120 PEOPLE SHOULD NOT BE CONFIRMED BEFORE THE SENATE RECESSES.

Where's the outrage? These 120 confirmations should not require heavy Senate lifting. They will all be confimed when all is said and done; so let's get them to say it and do it in the next couple of weeks. Why wouldn't the Senate want to add this to their list of accomplishments and save all their wrangling for the few appointments they really want to fight about. I'm totally unimpressed with the Senate's attention to this matter and do not accept their attention to other more serious matters as an excuse: they've shown they can ramrod large numbers through the system when they want to.

The nomination of John Walters, to be Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, was held over until the next business meeting in order for there to be an opportunity for debate.

The following U.S. Attorney nominees were approved by voice vote as well: Leura G. Canary, Middle District of Alabama; Paul K. Charlton, Arizona; Jeffrey G. Collins, Eastern District of Michigan; William S. Duffey, Jr., Northern District of Georgia; Dunn Lampton, Southern District of Mississippi; Alice H. Martin, Northern District of Alabama; William W. A plan by President Bush to assert control over the records of his last three predecessors drew criticism yesterday from President Bill Clinton and several historians, with critics contending that Bush's policy would have prevented the release of the Watergate tapes.

Administration officials said Bush plans to issue an executive order that would allow either former presidents or the White House to withhold presidential papers from the public. A House subcommittee plans a hearing next week, and critics vowed a court challenge.

The order imposes broad restrictions on the Presidential Records Act of 1978, which made papers of future presidents the property of the National Archives, following a court fight over President Richard Nixon's papers. Administration officials said it was prompted by a request for 68,000 pages of records of President Ronald Reagan, the first president whose records are subject to the act.

Under Bush's order, either the incumbent president or the former president?and in some cases, the family of a deceased president?could veto the release of documents requested by scholars, journalists or others. White House counsel Alberto R. Gonzales said any decision to withhold documents could be challenged in court, and said the administration would lose if a particular decision did not have solid constitutional grounding. He acknowledged that process could take years. Gonzales said the White House had not created any new privileges or obstacles, but ?simply implemented an orderly process to deal with this information.'

?There's a recognition of the importance, for historical reasons, of releasing as much information as we can, being mindful of the fact that there may be reasons that it's inappropriate or harmful to this country not to release certain information,' Gonzales said. ?I think we would err on trying to release as much information as we possibly can.'

Gonzales, briefing reporters in a conference room that once was a hideaway office for Nixon, said the administration plans to ?give a lot of deference to the former president.' But he said the incumbent president ?will be in a better position to decide whether or not the release of documents of a former President do, in fact, jeopardize, say, the national security of this country.'

A Clinton aide said a representative of the president objected to the decision in a recent letter to the White House, arguing that sufficient protections are already on the books. The aide said yesterday that Bush's executive order could hamper public trust in government.

?A government's legitimacy is based on the trust of its people, and when decisions are made on behalf of the American people, citizens eventually have to be able to see the process of how those decisions came to be,' the aide said. The letter was written by Bruce Lindsey, Clinton's deputy White House counsel and now the lawyer for the William J. Clinton Foundation.

Historians said vast troves of documents offering insight into presidential decision-making could be lost, and opponents of Bush's plan said the new policy could have prevented the Watergate tapes from being made public. These opponents said Bush's order would crimp the Presidential Records Act of 1978, which put the papers of future presidents into the public domain, following a court fight over Nixon's papers.

The act applies to the papers of Clinton, Reagan, and Bush's father, President George W. Bush. Many officials of the Reagan and first Bush administration are back in the White House, and critics contend that the executive order may be motivated by a desire to protect them. The White House said the order is necessary because of a law that went into effect this year and required an implementation procedure.

Bush's plan was reported yesterday by The Washington Post. Gonzales said the order would be signed soon, but it will being finalized. He said he would not release the planned order, but the Federation of American Scientist posted an Oct. 29 draft on its Web site (www.fas.org).

A House Government Reform subcommittee headed by Rep. Stephen Horn (R-Calif.) will hold a hearing on the mushrooming dispute Tuesday. A subcommittee spokesman said the White House would be invited to testify.

Anna K. Nelson, a historian at American University who specializes in the declassification of government records, said Bush appeared to be trying to set a precedent that would give him full control over his own papers 12 years after he leaves office. ?This order sets up a minefield in front of what was a straightforward piece of legislation,' she said. ?It's going to cause a lot of political problems because different parties take over the White House from time to time.'

Thomas S. Blanton, executive director of the National Security Archive, a private research institute specializing in U.S. documents obtained through the Freedom of Information Act, asserted that the new executive order would have prevented release of Nixon's tapes, since courts tend to ?bend over backwards to defer to the government's claims unless on their face those claims are absurd.'

?The default setting for this new system is secrecy,' Blanton said. ?The Presidential Records Act was designed to shift power over presidential records from presidents personally to the government and ultimately to the citizens. This shifts the power back.'

Gonzales said the process being set up by Bush calls for both the former and incumbent presidents to render their judgments ?in 90 days, if at all possible.' He said challenges would be handled by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. ?The requester will have to show compelling circumstance or need to override that privilege,' Gonzales said.

Gonzales referred repeatedly to national security as a possible justification for withholding records. ?It is the responsibility of this president, now, to protect the national security of this country,' he said. However, critics said national security is already protected by the 1978 act and other laws and regulations.

Tim: Per your question, below is Brad's analysis, which seems right to me -- namely, a one-time event due no doubt to sloppiness by someone on Hill either in handling their printed-out e-mails or by leaving screen in open area unattended.

Subject: Re: Re[2]: Nominees & the War on Terrorism

It is indeed difficult to imagine, given the distribution list on this e-mail, how this could have fallen into the hands of the press. I would certainly hate to think that we can't rely on the security of our e-mail communications, although logic suggests that whatever happened here was probably a one-off event. (If someone had regular access, it's doubtful that (a) this would be the e-mail they would have publicized, or (b) that this would have happened only once.) Still this probably merits some investigation -- how to do that, I don't know.

none for me until 19th or 20th; even if POTUS has time this week,
I have assumed we should try to have only one meeting with POTUS if we can do that

Stuart told me that POTUS has a lot of available time this week. Why not do a batch now? I have two judges. How many do others have?

We will request a little time to discuss Judges with the President on Monday, Nov. 12.

Yes - I know it is Veterans Day - that is the best day next week to do it. Thursday and Friday of this week are not an option.

If you will have something for this possible meeting date please let me know.

Karen,

Concerning Title III subsection (1)(b), "religious criteria" means more than mere church or denominational membership. The idea is to expand protection of FBO autonomy. Further, being a member of a governing board is an unpaid or volunteer position -- not one of employment. There are no "protected classes" when it comes to volunteers.

Subject: Omnibus C/C bill (LRM IMS3) - REVISED title III (Equal Treatment for Nongovernmental Providers)

Title III has been revised and currently reads as reprinted below (note new paragraph (6)). Please respond with comments or clearance by 11:00am Monday (11/5).

Eileen/Lety/Mathew/Gil/Roz/Steve: Regarding the "procurement contract" issue (paragraphs (3) and (4)), DOJ advises as follows: Most federal social services are delivered via grant agreement or cooperative agreement, as defined in 31 USC 3601-08, and not via "procurement contract." But there are exceptions: Bureau of Prisons and FEMA, for example. So, the thought was to cover ALL social services, including those via procurement contract. Title III would apply to procurement contracts ONLY IF the contract involves delivery via a "social service program" as defined and, granted, most procurement contracts are not for delivery of social services, and therefore, that the references to "procurement contract" be retained.

Don/David/Carl: In paragraph (1)(b), does "religious criteria" include prohibitions against members of protected classes? Or is it simply defined as membership in the religious organization? Suggestion was made that intent

be to exclude persons who engage in activity inconsistent with the religion's principles, not merely those who are not members of the religion, and that this

TITLE III

Message

- We will not rest until every terrorist group of global reach has been found, has been stopped, and has been defeated.
- Our military is systematically pursuing its mission. We have destroyed many terrorist training camps. We have severed communications links. We are taking out air defenses and now we are attacking the Taliban's front lines.
- We have a vast coalition that is uniting the world and increasingly isolating the terrorists. No nation can be neutral in this conflict because no civilized nation can be secure in a world threatened by terror.

Recent Key Quotes

- Growing Number of Afghans Wonder if Osama bin Laden's Presence Worth the Pain (11/5/01, Associated Press) – "Honestly we don't know why he stays here," Mohammed Farhat, a Kabul pharmacist, said of bin Laden. "The situation is very bad for the Afghan people, but there is nothing we can do."
- From Damascus, Amre Moussa, Secretary-General of the 22-nation Arab League dismissed Osama bin Laden's appeal to Muslims to join a holy war against the West saying that, "bin Laden doesn't speak in the name of Arabs and Muslims." (11/4/01, Reuters)
- Egyptian Foreign Minister Ahmad Maher also rejected the [bin Laden] appeal, saying that the world was against Osama bin Laden, "There is a war between bin Laden and the whole world." (11/4/01, Reuters)
- King Abdullah of Jordan: "These terrorists pose a double threat to us as Arabs and Muslims: the threat of inflicting suffering on people and the threat of tarnishing the image of a great religion and civilization." "Our concern is that the Osama Bin Ladens of this world would like to make this a struggle between East and West, between the West and Islam ...and we have to be careful as Muslims and Christians in the international community not to fall into that trap." (10/29/01,AFP)
- Turkish Prime Minister Ecevit, when asked whether military action during Ramadan would put Turkey in a difficult position replied, "Operation Enduring Freedom is not a fight against Islam, and terrorism does not respect Ramadan." (11/2/01, Turkish press reports)

- Damascus cab driver: "Why doesn't Bin Laden help the Afghan people with all his money by building hospitals and schools, instead of wasting it in a war against the U.S.?" (10/17/01, BBC Online)

THE GROWING CATALOG OF TALIBAN & AL QAEDA MISINFORMATION

Old Faithful in Yellowstone erupts every 76 minutes and Big Ben in London strikes every hour. And just as regularly, it seems, Al Qaeda and the Taliban are making more and more outlandish misstatements.

Every day, as the truth becomes known, the world grows ever more weary of Al Qaeda and Taliban propaganda.

The Taliban and Al Qaeda continue to add to their lengthy catalog of lies. Below are some of the latest examples of their misstatements.

SAMPLES OF MISSTATEMENTS

CLAIM: The Taliban attack the U.N. for not helping the Afghan people.

☑ FACT: The Taliban continue to harrass and beat aid workers and steal food, medicine and other humanitarian supplies intended for the innocent Afghan people. The spokesman for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Peter Kessler, has said, "What we need is the cooperation of the Taliban. The UNHCR and our agencies have had our vehicles stolen, our offices taken over, and our staff beaten. The needs inside Afghanistan are absolutely enormous. People are suffering. Aid agencies need the environment in which to work, and right now it is mainly the Taliban who can give us that space."

☑ FACT: The Taliban are actually hijacking humanitarian convoys for military purposes. The November 6 Washington Post reports, "A truck in a convoy purportedly on a humanitarian mission to deliver food tipped over, and crates of tank and mortar shells could be seen spilling to the ground underneath a thin layer of flour."

CLAIM: The Taliban accuse the U.S. of targeting civilians.

☑ FACT: The Taliban are actually placing their military assets near civilian areas and using innocent Afghans as human shields for their oppressive regime. The November 6 Washington Post reports that the Taliban are actually placing military assets in mosques and across the street from hospitals and innocent people's homes. Taliban commanders have also taken over humanitarian aid facilities for military purposes. A senior officer tells the Washington Post, "Whole villages are being used as human shields by the Taliban to protect their large stockpiles of ammunition and weapons hidden in nearby caves."

CLAIM: The Taliban claim repeatedly to have shot down American B-52 bombers and helicopters.

☑ FACT: The Taliban have shot down no American B-52 bombers or helicopters.

CLAIM: The Taliban claim that U.S. forces are using chemical and biological weapons.

☑ FACT: The U.S. has never used chemical weapons in Afghanistan.

President Bush's Agenda for Economic Growth & Job Creation

THE PRESIDENT'S APPROACH TO ECONOMIC GROWTH AND JOB CREATION

- The terror attacks of September 11 caused a shock to our nation's economy. The most recent unemployment data showed that more than 415,000 Americans lost their jobs in October – the highest monthly job losses in more than two decades. The Gross Domestic Product for the third quarter was negative 0.4 percent.

- President Bush supports practical steps to help restore the economic confidence of our country – both for consumers and businesses. Since September 11, the federal government has allocated or pledged close to $60 billion for disaster relief, recovery and cleanup, national defense and homeland security – and has committed to spending billions more to help dislocated workers and New York recovery efforts. For example, the President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for Americans who lost their jobs as a direct result of the terrorist attacks;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers displaced from their jobs to receive health insurance;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training (for example, funds could be used to pay up to 75% of health care premiums covered by COBRA for up to ten months); and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal programs that provide job search, training, placement and other services.

- These are important and necessary steps to help America's workers. But these efforts must be complemented by an effective economic stimulus plan to prevent job loss and get displaced workers back to work. More federal spending is not the best way to stimulate growth. Instead, the best way to retain and create jobs is through tax relief that improves incentives to work and invest while also restoring consumer and business confidence.

  - Tax relief can arrive quickly. Unlike spending programs, tax relief does not have to wait for program guidelines to be developed and processes put in place. New, lower tax rates for consumers and businesses will show up in paychecks starting January 1.
  - Tax relief is efficient. Spending programs used as economic stimulus tools often do not put money in the right places, instead coming with too many restrictions to give consumers and businesses what they need most. Tax relief gives individuals and businesses the ability to make economic decisions for themselves. And, unlike spending programs that tend to take on a life of their own, the budgetary impact of tax relief is limited and better known.
  - Tax relief will best help to expand job-creating investment. The changes outlined by the President will give companies and entrepreneurs bottom-line incentives to invest in new equipment, keep current jobs and add new workers. Government spending programs are unlikely to have an impact on productivity or wages. The Japanese experience of the 1990s suggests that reviving a slumping economy with large increases in spending results in budget deficits, larger public debt, high unemployment and low consumer confidence.

THE PRESIDENT'S PRINCIPLES FOR ECONOMIC GROWTH AND JOB CREATION

- The President supports the following initiatives to spur economic growth and job creation plan:
  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Puts more money in the hands of consumers, entrepreneurs and small businesses and improves economic growth incentives by accelerating the marginal tax rate cuts already approved by Congress. Accelerated tax relief for consumers will give them more to spend and invest, and tax relief for businesses and entrepreneurs will help them to retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.
  - Tax Relief for Low and Moderate Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond the tax relief already approved by Congress. Helping these taxpayers, who did not get a tax rebate check earlier this year, will ensure that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

- Recent studies support these principles as the best way to create more jobs in America.
  - The Council of Economic Advisers estimates that the approach supported by the President will help businesses to create roughly 300,000 more jobs by the end of 2002.
  - Economists from the Center for Data Analysis at the Heritage Foundation estimated that the approach supported by the President would produce almost 3 times more jobs than the Senate economic stimulus plan. The analysis also found that the President's approach will cause the average family's disposable income to rise by $1062 per year over the next four years, compared to only $175 per year for the Baucus plan.
  - Merrill Lynch's Weekly Economic and Financial Commentary noted that "the breathtaking scale of monetary and fiscal stimulus all but guarantees a powerful recovery by the middle of next year… (assuming) that Congress will deliver the goods and not end in gridlock."

- The economic growth package is just one of the steps the federal government take to improve America's short-term economic health and long-term economic prospects. Enacting an energy plan that ensures our nation has a reliable, affordable supply of energy and greater energy self-sufficiency is a priority. And, expanding trade is essential to the growth of our economy and the prosperity and progress of the world.

- The House of Representatives took an important step by passing an economic stimulus package based on the President's principles. Now, it is time for the Senate to act so the economic stimulus can take effect quickly.

- President Bush will continue to work with Congress on a bipartisan basis to enact a meaningful, effective economic stimulus package.

THE PRESIDENT'S APPROACH TO ECONOMIC GROWTH AND JOB CREATION

- The terror attacks of September 11 caused a shock to our nation's economy. The most recent unemployment data showed that more than 415,000 Americans lost their jobs in October – the highest monthly job losses in more than two decades. The Gross Domestic Product for the third quarter was negative 0.4 percent.

- President Bush supports practical steps to help restore the economic confidence of our country – both for consumers and businesses. Since September 11, the federal government has allocated or pledged close to $60 billion for disaster relief, recovery and cleanup, national defense and homeland security – and has committed to spending billions more to help dislocated workers and New York recovery efforts. For example, the President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for Americans who lost their jobs as a direct result of the terrorist attacks;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers displaced from their jobs to receive health insurance;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training (for example, funds could be used to pay up to 75% of health care premiums covered by COBRA for up to ten months); and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal programs that provide job search, training, placement and other services.

- These are important and necessary steps to help America's workers. But these efforts must be complemented by an effective economic stimulus plan to prevent job loss and get displaced workers back to work. More federal spending is not the best way to stimulate growth. Instead, the best way to retain and create jobs is through tax relief that improves incentives to work and invest while also restoring consumer and business confidence.

  - Tax relief can arrive quickly. Unlike spending programs, tax relief does not have to wait for program guidelines to be developed and processes put in place. New, lower tax rates for consumers and businesses will show up in paychecks starting January 1.
  - Tax relief is efficient. Spending programs used as economic stimulus tools often do not put money in the right places, instead coming with too many restrictions to give consumers and businesses what they need most. Tax relief gives individuals and businesses the ability to make economic decisions for themselves. And, unlike spending programs that tend to take on a life of their own, the budgetary impact of tax relief is limited and better known.
  - Tax relief will best help to expand job-creating investment. The changes outlined by the President will give companies and entrepreneurs bottom-line incentives to invest in new equipment, keep current jobs and add new workers. Government spending programs are unlikely to have an impact on productivity or wages. The Japanese experience of the 1990s suggests that reviving a slumping economy with large increases in spending results in budget deficits, larger public debt, high unemployment and low consumer confidence.

THE PRESIDENT'S PRINCIPLES FOR ECONOMIC GROWTH AND JOB CREATION

- The President supports the following initiatives to spur economic growth and job creation plan:
  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Puts more money in the hands of consumers, entrepreneurs and small businesses and improves economic growth incentives by accelerating the marginal tax rate cuts already approved by Congress. Accelerated tax relief for consumers will give them more to spend and invest, and tax relief for businesses and entrepreneurs will help them to retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.
  - Tax Relief for Low and Moderate Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond the tax relief already approved by Congress. Helping these taxpayers, who did not get a tax rebate check earlier this year, will ensure that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

- Recent studies support these principles as the best way to create more jobs in America.
  - The Council of Economic Advisers estimates that the approach supported by the President will help businesses to create roughly 300,000 more jobs by the end of 2002.
  - Economists from the Center for Data Analysis at the Heritage Foundation estimated that the approach supported by the President would produce almost 3 times more jobs than the Senate economic stimulus plan. The analysis also found that the President's approach will cause the average family's disposable income to rise by $1062 per year over the next four years, compared to only $175 per year for the Baucus plan.
  - Merrill Lynch's Weekly Economic and Financial Commentary noted that "the breathtaking scale of monetary and fiscal stimulus all but guarantees a powerful recovery by the middle of next year… (assuming) that Congress will deliver the goods and not end in gridlock."

- The economic growth package is just one of the steps the federal government take to improve America's short-term economic health and long-term economic prospects. Enacting an energy plan that ensures our nation has a reliable, affordable supply of energy and greater energy self-sufficiency is a priority. And, expanding trade is essential to the growth of our economy and the prosperity and progress of the world.

- The House of Representatives took an important step by passing an economic stimulus package based on the President's principles. Now, it is time for the Senate to act so the economic stimulus can take effect quickly.

- President Bush will continue to work with Congress on a bipartisan basis to enact a meaningful, effective economic stimulus package.
